Guess what? Recent surveys suggest that employers increasingly seek college graduates with critical thinking skills.

SMALLER CLASSES ARE THE KEY.

How do we teach these skills? Through a student-to-teacher ratio of 18:1, you will interact closely with your professors in mastering concepts and ideas. Class discussions and writing exercises are essential in bringing you into the learning process. Classes are then matched with practical application through the myriad of internship and practical training opportunities available to international students.
